CIVIL TRIAL LAW

Lawyers who go to trial and win like to talk about their victories. That's only natural.

What's not so natural – lawyers will tell you this – is going to trial as often as three times in a year. But three times in three months? That's just downright crazy.

But it's exactly what lawyers Charla Aldous and Brent Walker did. Three times in three months, all in high-profile cases, they headed to the courthouse to do what D Magazine readers know they do so well: stand up in front of a jury, tell their client's story and try a case.

And how'd they do?

Well, the State Bar of Texas has very strict rules on what lawyers can and cannot say in a magazine ad about the cases they win, so let's just put it like this: all three of Charla Aldous' and Brent Walker's clients left the courthouse with reasons to be happy with their lawyers.

You might even say lots and lots of reasons to be happy with their lawyers.

If you ever need a lawyer, maybe they can make you happy, too.
